

PREPARATION OF MANUSCRIPTS AND NORMS FOR CONTRIBUTORS

A submission of a manuscript to the Journal implies that:

1. Your manuscript has not been published before or in parallel in any other written journal.
2. The coauthor (if applicable) agrees with the publication
3. The publisher of Aporía agrees with delivering an opinion on the evaluation of the manuscript before the expiration of three months
4. Every submitted manuscript will be reviewed and evaluated by a blind refereeing system: two academic peers and by a third in the case of a tie. All evaluators are independent from the publisher of the magazine
5. Manuscripts may be accepted, rejected, or accepted with modifications. All manuscripts that need to make substantive changes will be reviewed again.
6. The editor reserves the right to make formal changes to manuscripts approved for publication with the sole purpose of standardizing the format of the issue
7. The copyright of the articles published in the Journal belongs to the Pontifical Catholic University of Chile, but reproduction of any content is permitted with full citation of the source (journal title, year, number, article title and author's name or authors).

Preparation of manuscripts:

The Journal receives manuscripts preferably in Spanish and English, but Portuguese, French and Italian are also accepted languages. All manuscripts must be submitted as an electronic text, by e-mail at: aporía@uc.cl, in accordance with the following formal requirements:

- i) Number of pages: there is a maximum of 20 pages and a minimum of five, including footnotes and bibliography.
- ii) Characteristics of the page: letter size; top and bottom margins: 2.5 cm; left and right margins: 3 cm.
- iii) Type, size and spacing of the letter: Times New Roman, 12 points and 1.5 spacing along the body of the text.
- iv) How to cite the literature: the manuscript should follow APA style, but it should be also noted:
  - a) The titles of articles in periodicals should be in double quotes. For example: Mancilla, A. 2012. "Samuel Pufendorf and the right of necessity". Aporía · International Journal of Philosophical Research N°3, pp. 47-64. O bien: Mancilla (2012). "Samuel Pufendorf and the right of necessity". Aporía · International Journal of Philosophical Research N°3, pp. 47-64.
  - b) The comments on an author must cite the page or pages of the commented text. For example: Mancilla (2012), p. 48, says that (...). Or: Mancilla (2012), pp. 47-48, says that (...).
  - c) Use of italics: all technical terms from languages other than Spanish must be written in italics, but not common abbreviations (for example: it is correct to write ad honorem, and kósmos, but not common abbreviations. For instance: e.g., is correct, but e.g., it is not)
  - d) Terms of art and creative terms must be enclosed in single quotes (e.g., 'deconstructionism', but not deconstructionism or "deconstructionism").
  - e) The quotes from published authors should always be written in double quotes. For example: Aristotle says "All men by nature desire to know" (Metaphysics I, 1, 980a21).
  - f) The first page of the submitted manuscript should include (in this order): the title of the article, the author's name, academic affiliation, acknowledgments (if applicable) and author e-mail address.
  - g) The footnotes will be placed at the bottom of the very same page where the reference has been made. They will be numbered in Arabic numerals and in Times New Roman 10-point, single-spaced.
  - h) The superscript number flagging a footnote should be placed after any period, comma or other mark of punctuation (e.g., it is correct to write: "(...) as Plato.<sup>1</sup>" and not: "(...) as Plato<sup>1</sup>.").

The preparation of Book Reviews and Remarks:

- v) Must follow the same formal criteria described above, but their page numbers should be reduced. Book Reviews: maximum 4 pages. Remarks: 6 pages.
